

Memories in Stone

A Survey of the Old Graveyard

Oranmore

Foreword

The purpose for which we have undertaken this work is to stimulate interest in local history and to assist anyone undertaking research into their own family history. There is also a good deal of information here for those interested in the history of Oranmore and it is our hope that it will be used extensively. We believe that this graveyard is a site of important archaeological significance, perhaps the most important in Oranmore, and as such it should be carefully preserved. The record of many families who lived and died over the last two hundred and fifty years are set in stone here though they may have vanished and their descendents may be scattered all over the world.

A Survey of Oranmore Old
Graveyard

Introduction

Oranmore Heritage was founded as the Old Graveyard Restoration Group in 2001 by interested members of the Oranmore community in order to preserve the Old Graveyard in Oranmore which was under threat of being developed for purposes other than a graveyard.

At that time the Graveyard had been closed to new graves for nearly 50 years. It had been neglected and was overgrown and the perimeter walls were breached. The Committee felt strongly that steps needed to be taken to restore and preserve the Graveyard as it is a designated archaeological site and is the last resting place of generations of people from Oranmore and the surrounding areas.

The Committee restored the walls, and with assistance from Galway County Council made a path around the Graveyard to make the graves accessible. Various other works were carried throughout the site. At all times during restoration works, steps were taken to ensure that the integrity of the graves was not compromised.

Having accomplished access to most of the graves, the Committee decided to carry out a survey and record the inscriptions on the various slabs and monuments as far as was possible. In tandem with this, we proceeded to initiate the recording of all the deaths registered in the Ecclesiastical parish of Oranmore between 1864 and 1950 to assist those who may wish to investigate their ancestry. Access to the Register of Deaths was very limited and ultimately completely restricted and therefore the Registry of Deaths information, while as complete as possible, should in specific cases be investigated by individuals at the Registry of Deaths.

The result of the work is contained in this publication and we hope that it will be of benefit to those who are interested in tracing their Oranmore roots.

Oranmore Old Graveyard, the subject of this work, is situated on the right hand side of the main street as you go towards the southern end of the village. It was originally accessed by a lane clearly shown on the old Ordnance Survey maps. The lane has now been absorbed into a commercial development, through which it is still possible to gain access to the Graveyard. The key to the gate can be obtained from the shop on this site.

The Graveyard is of irregular shape, measuring .302 hectares. This irregular shape created a lot of problems when decisions had to be made about where to locate the path and how to divide the Graveyard in order to survey and record the inscriptions on the slabs and monuments. Although all the graves are oriented in an east/west direction there are no ordered rows and it could be said the graves are in a chaotic state of distribution.

It is believed to be a very old site, although efforts to find any documented history relating to its age have so far yielded little fruit. A church ruin, which forms part of the northern perimeter wall, is thought to be of thirteenth century origin. Although only the sidewalls remain, there are indications that it was a much larger church. Cut stone, which probably framed its doorways and windows, is to be found as grave markers around the Graveyard. It is likely that the church fell into disuse and decay in the post-Reformation period. In the Ordnance Survey letters of 1837, it is described as a ruin, and there are a number of slabs within its precincts dating from the late 1700s. In addition, there are some slabs from the medieval period in the immediate vicinity of the ruin, which would support this belief.

Like many graveyards where ownership could not be established, it came under the jurisdiction of a Burial Board in the mid 1800s, and with the demise of the Burial Board system, it became the responsibility of the local authority, in this case Galway County Council.

In the 2001 Draft Development Plan, it was proposed to turn this graveyard into a 'Pocket Park' to provide open space in the centre of the village. The Graveyard had been officially closed for about fifty years at the time—though a few interments did subsequently take place there.

There were very strong objections to the proposal by local people whose ancestors were buried there, and the proposal was not acted on. It was at this point that we came together to form the Old Graveyard Restoration Group¹. We set about repairing the walls, clearing away the shrubbery, gathering the rubbish and clearing away the long grass.

The following year, with help, guidance and financial assistance from Galway County Council, we constructed a metre wide path around the graveyard to facilitate access to the graves. At the same time, the Presentation Nun's graveyard, previously walled off in the eastern corner of the site, was incorporated into the site².

It was decided to make the path roughly about thirty metres from the perimeter wall where this was practical. However in order to avoid walking on grave slabs or designated graves the path has taken many twists and turns, resulting in a very erratic route, as will be seen from the map. It has proved nevertheless to be very effective and helped in sectioning the graveyard for the Survey. For the purposes of the Survey, the site was divided into six sections labelled A through F (see attached map). Section A begins just inside the entrance gate and is bounded on the south-western side by the perimeter wall and on the northern side by the path. It extends to the point where the path meets the wall near the end of the Church of Ireland site. Section B extends from a line roughly from the northern end of the church ruin to the path and is bounded by the perimeter wall in the north-western corner. Section C is bounded by the path on the southern side and includes the Presentation Nuns' plot and the monument within the church ruins. Section D reaches from the Nuns' plot to the entrance gate and is bounded on the northern side by the path and on the other side by the perimeter wall to the rear of the village. Section E is located on the northern side of the path, which forms the boundary of Section A and extends to a line running from the Walsh family grave (F1) to the left side of the grave of Patt Keane (F47). Section F extends from this line to the path which forms the boundary of Sections B and C.

¹ The Old Graveyard Restoration Group subsequently changed its name to Oranmore Heritage as it began to become involved in other matters relating to local heritage. See www.oranmoreheritage.org

All visible slabs and monuments were recorded in a thorough examination of the site. However, because this site was neglected for so many years, it is also possible that some slabs have sunk into the ground. The growth and dying back of vegetation over many years would have formed a new layer of topsoil. Many graves have caved in and some monuments have fallen. In our work we did not interfere with these, nor did we dig around any monument where part of the script was below the surface. At all times the integrity of the site was respected.

Every effort was made to record the inscriptions accurately but in some cases it was not possible due to the deterioration of the slab or monument. These cases are indicated by a question mark (?) or symbol of illegible text (^^^)

Aberrations in spelling are not uncommon in the original inscriptions and these are recorded in the Survey as they appear on the grave slabs. This may be due to human error or to the fact that some names have multiple spellings e.g. Coen/Coan, Furey/Fury, Byrnes/Burns etc. – this should be considered in the course of any research undertaken.

There are other minor oddities such as the frequent use of superscript evidently caused by the stonemason running out of space or the last letter or letters of a word being carried over to the following line.

Many of the gravestones are decorated, some with very elaborate symbols. Some have occupational symbols indicating the trade practised by the deceased. The Cullinan grave slab (C28, Figure 1) for example as well as being richly decorated has an interesting symbol engraved on it. It shows a bent arm holding a triangular shaped tool in the hand within a circle. There is some indecipherable script underneath and there is what appears to be a small gimlet (a boring tool) within this circle as well. We can only speculate what trade might be represented – it may well be the symbol of a stonemason. The slab on the grave of Patrick Hanly (E9, Figure 2) has the symbol of a plough carved on it. There may have been further carving on it, which is no longer visible due to the deterioration of the surface of the slab.

E18 is the last resting place of James Malone "who departed this life February 22 1797 aged 67 years". It is safe to assume that he was a blacksmith. On the bottom half of the slab in a panel with an arched top are carved the outline of an anvil, a hammer and a tongs or pincers. (Figures 3 & 4)

E32 is also the grave of a blacksmith, Mathias Bermingham 'who departed this life January 30th 1790 aged 84'. His grave slab shows a square panel, this time with a hammer, tongs or pincers on each side and a horseshoe over a small anvil in the middle. (Figures 5)

On the slab of Hugh Coen (E23, Figures 6 and 7) are the tools of a carpenter, an axe, a saw, a pincers and a square.

Tradesmen were proud of their crafts and were highly regarded in the society of their day. They may well have been more prosperous than most since their services were needed all year round and work would always have been available in the 'Big Houses'. Blacksmiths would have been in demand all the time in the era of 'horse power', making farm implements and gates and shoeing horses of which there were many.³

As well as the graves with occupation symbols there are many examples of high quality artwork on slabs and monuments throughout the graveyard well worthy of study for anybody interested in the stone carving of that period.

³ In an address given to the Statistical and Social Inquiry Society of Ireland in 1888, the then Registrar General Dr. Grimshaw quoting from the 1861 Census stated that in that year, there were 614,000 horses, 20,000 mules and 194,000 asses - enough to keep many blacksmiths busy.

There are a great number of graves marked only by a stone, some stones obviously taken from the walls of the church ruin as previously noted, and there were many interments that were left unmarked.⁴ Many slabs and monuments, particularly the older ones, are decorated with the letters IHS surmounted by a cross. This is the symbol of the Holy Name of Jesus⁵. Devotion to the Holy Name was popularised in Italy in the thirteenth century by St. Bernadine of Siena and was formally approved for the universal Church in 1721.

In the early 1700's funerals could only take place with the permission of, and payment to, the local Anglican minister and this symbol may have been a discreet way for Catholics to show their religion without offending the imposed church authority⁶. In this graveyard, the IHS symbol with the initials of the deceased or an abbreviation of the name characterises a number of the monuments from the eighteenth century. (Figures 8-12)

Anyone undertaking research on the graveyard would have to consider a number of factors. While it is intended to record the burials for the Ecclesiastical parish of Oranmore, (Figure 13) it appears that a number of families outside the Ecclesiastical parish are interred here. The Ryder and Grealy families from Ballinamanagh and the Bradys from Gurrane Lower in Maree are examples of this. Fahys from Lydican and Kings from Briarhill are also buried here, as are the Fahys and the O' Flahertys from

⁴ Our efforts to identify these graves are ongoing and we have appealed to local people to come forward and help.

⁵ The IHS monogram is an abbreviation of Jesus' name in Greek to the first three letters. Thus IHΣΟΥΣ is shortened to IHΣ and transliterated into English or Latin characters as IHS or IHC.

Murrough, the maternal ancestors of the Cannon family in Moneymore. There are many others as well about whom we have no knowledge. On the other hand, there are families from the parish itself who are not interred in this graveyard. The ancestors of the Finn family of Oranhill and the Trayers family of Renville are buried in Kilcaiman. So, the possibility of some Oranmore families being buried in other cemeteries cannot be ruled out.

In conjunction with this survey we have also examined and recorded the Register of Deaths for the Ecclesiastical Parish of Oranmore from the year 1864 to 1950. The cemetery behind St. Mary's Church⁷ across the road from the graveyard site was opened in the mid 1930's, and, with few exceptions that are well documented, all later interments took place there.

In comparing the Survey of the Graveyard with the Register of Deaths, it appears that not all deaths were registered. Local knowledge of specific deaths, which do not appear on the Register would confirm this. Local knowledge would also suggest that the addresses in the Register are not always correct. Addresses like Cregannamore and Cregannabeg, Gurrane North and Gurrane South, Renville East and Renville West have contributed to this. Significant other discrepancies have been noted in the records. For example Ellen Grealy of Oranmore died on 12th September 1903 according to her gravestone (F21) yet the Register of Deaths records an entry of Ellen Greaney of Oranhill who died on 7th September 1903. It was widely accepted that 10 to 15% of deaths were not recorded, and our research would indicate that the percentage might be even higher in Oranmore. As late as the 1970s, the number not registered was still very high. Professor

⁷ St. Mary's Church now houses Oranmore Library.

John Kennedy, Pathologist at the Regional Hospital, told the Western Health Board of the day, that as many as 35% of those who died in some parts of the West of Ireland were buried without their deaths being registered. It was suggested that responsibility for registration be given to undertakers but that was found to be impractical at that time⁸.

Over 80 deaths registered between 1864 and 1902 have the address 'Newtownbutler'. No such townland appears on the Ordnance Survey maps. Again, local knowledge would suggest – though this is not definite and requires more research – that this name was imposed on Carrowmoneash by the Butler family who lived in Thornpark. It appears only twice after 1900 and not at all after 1902. Griffith's valuation circa 1855 shows about 50 occupiers of land and houses in Carrowmoneash all leased from Xavierius or Ann Butler.

Some addresses in the Register are not actual townlands. ✱ 'Bayview' home of the Blakes is in Renville West, 'Shraduff' is in Oranmore, 'Thornpark' is in Carrowmoneash, 'Roseville' is in Moneyduff and Vesey Lodge and Oraniland are in Oranmore. Caheradrine, is in the townland of Cregannamore and Tonroe, though not shown as part of the civil parish of Oranmore, is included in the Ecclesiastical parish. Seafield, Cottage and Ardfry are contiguous townlands not in the Ecclesiastical parish of Oranmore, but may be of interest to researchers. (figure 13) We noted that addresses are shown on slabs in the graveyard only in very rare cases.

Register of Deaths*

* Access to the Register of Deaths in Galway was very limited to the Committee of Oranmore Heritage and was ultimately withdrawn. Notwithstanding, the Committee decided to make available the information that we did collate. Therefore, all the information herein, while as complete as possible, should in specific cases be investigated by individuals at the Registry of Deaths, Births and Marriages, Newcastle Road, Galway. Oranmore Heritage accepts no responsibility for any errors or omissions.
